The fear and terror of me

by

Professor Kriben Pillay

(University of KwaZulu-Natal; Westville Campus)

1

There's a fear,
a fine quivering,
that we instinctively flinch from
into a halo of smoke,
the intoxicant rush
of liquid gods,
or thought forms,
dreams,
that we barely
notice the unease,
in our made-up
places of refuge.
If it does push
in spite of me, there's always some illusion
to assert myself,
to halt
the fear and terror
of being no one.

Or I shrink
into acceptable ways,
to feel acceptable.
But for the rare few,
a terror overwhelms,
and I become a maddening storm,
or the empty centre,
where fictions have ceased,
and I am no one,
and everything.

COVID -19 WORLD
by
Professor John K. Chang'ach
(Moi University, Kenya)

2

Developing and spreading very fast
Infectious, contagious.
A simple cough
From advanced nations to less
Corona Virus comes
Very softly and seriously,
But little do we know about the disease
A dreaded ailment – Corona pandemic.

COVID –19 knows no bounds
The rich also cry.
It is an unseen quest
An uninvited yet free here and there
Rich or poor
Guilty or innocent affected
Thousands dead, some sick in bed
Corona virus is yours and mine.

The new normal!!!

- Quarantine
- Lockdown
- Social Distance
- Face Mask

- No greeting/hugging
- Stay safe
- Stay Home
- Sanitize
- Wash hands regularly with soap & properly
- General hygiene
- Keep environment clean
- Isolation
- Cessation of movement.

Our world was sweet
Here we lead a high life
And the world turned and locked
Jobs, travelling, businesses
Learning institutions all are affected.
Emergency Remote Online Learning & Learning
Here comes.
Let's today hope
And infallibly come
For yet another Noah episode
That another may be
So, the will of God be done
In aid of Corona world
To set us free again.
Let us not give up
Tomorrow is brighter
Together we overcome.

Prisoners of CV19
by
Dr. Ravi Naicker
(University of Pretoria)

Humanity sits glued to the telly
Whilst the SG of WHO announces The outbreak of the novel Corona virus.
Wuhan - the epicentre imploding.
The press gagged and no exploded vistas.
Death becomes our dreaded visitor
Uninvited it permeates our every breath
Searching for the vulnerable
Unrelenting and determined to destroy humanity.

Placed under house arrest
We succumb to the wearing of masks.
Our families and friends
Become long distance relatives
A fading memory lost in the time machine
Of social distancing.
Near yet so far - the proximity kills.
The curve climbs to epic proportions.
Governments shut down countries.
Hoping to flatten the curve.
The birds in the sky are flying freely

They have their safe haven.
Somewhat pondering where the flying machines are.
Experts on the CV19 crawl out of the woodwork
As the blame game continues shamelessly.
The Genesis of the virus disputed
The laboratory or animals remain a thorn in the side.
The economy takes a nosedive
As humanity carries the begging bowls.
Frontline workers are applauded for their valiant service.

A phone call from a stranger informing you of the worst,
"Your family member had been cremated with others"
You drop off your phone and scream.
You are alone at home; your neighbours hear you
But remain aloof.
You cry alone and wonder why you sent him shopping.
Nothing can be undone; your pain unprecedented.
Your loved one gone to become a static.

CV19 knows no colour, creed, religion or station.
Unleashed upon humanity in a matrix of surprise and confusion.

We implore the Creator for relief from this malaise
We ask for an umbrella of protection as the virus goes viral.

BOOK REVIEW

One of our favourite contemporary philosophers and cultural theorists, Slavoj Žižek, has just published a book, Pandemic: COVID-19 Shakes the World.

Žižek is his customarily provocative and insightful self, as he looks at the deeper meanings and the diverse consequences of the pandemic, that is currently pervading the world.

He raises many questions about the epidemiology of the COVID-19 virus. He is also sceptical about the programmes being implemented to curb the spread of the virus, and the way the logic of the “survival of the fittest” is generally accepted without being interrogated. This is ‘barbarism with a human face’, argues Žižek, who stresses that the crisis unfolding is three-fold – medical and economic, as well as mental.

We need to see, Žižek states, how global Capitalism, neoliberalism, and dysfunctional governance are wreaking havoc on our world, and how a mega-crisis awaits us.

Writing in quarantine, from his home in his native Slovenia, Žižek has asked his publishers to pay all royalties, from the book sales, to Doctors Without Borders.

COVID 19 – The invisible intruder

by

Dr. Roy Venketsamy & Dr. Keshni Bipath

(University of Pretoria; Groenkloof Campus)

5

Fear, stark fear staring into space
Nothing to hang on...no support.
I clutch my invisible shield, my only protection, in a world of chaos.
When, when will it be me?
It's only a matter of time...for the attack
Then what, fear, contemplation, decision or quarantined.
I am afraid, the invisible worm silently attacks humankind, mercilessly irrespective of race, colour or creed,
it lurks, stealthily...
 awaiting in anticipation.
The world waits patiently, expectantly for the invisible unknown.

An intruder, invader or thief, to claim another host.
I stare pensively, covered by an invisible shield no-where to run, no-where to hide.
Alas, no protection, no care, no retribution.....the end is nigh.
He entered my domain...looks around and attacks.
I am the host: to an invisible intruder.
I am taken!

Millena - Student at FEUSP (Faculty of Education, University of São Paulo, Brazil)

My name is Millena, I'm 21 years old and live in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Currently, I am studying at the Faculdade de Educação da Universidade de São Paulo – FEUSP (School of Education at the University of São Paulo). But, because of the pandemic context, we are not having classes in-person at the moment. Before all, I would like to clarify that I'm going to explain the context from my point of view, and it does not necessarily represent the whole scenario.

I like the School of Education so much! I've noticed at FEUSP that professors don't like/agree with keeping online classes because they essentially need the presence to maintain their pedagogical purpose: some classes need person-person contact to happen. Beside, all the FEUSP's professors are trying to adapt their classes in front of this new reality by creating methodologies of evaluation, by using a range of different technological resources, in order to achieve the most students as possible to maintain them accessing the knowledge and studying. Some of the professors admit that the quality of teaching will decrease, and their old evaluation methods should be forgotten, but they must give up choosing a unique method or creating so much and overloading students' lives with a lot of activities. They are trying to think manners to equilibrate tasks. For instance, in order to give up old methods, it is not being fair to consider the presence of the students just by considering their presence in live classes, considering a bunch of obstacles that now exist in student lives (difficult having access to the internet, mental health, diseases, including the risk of contagious by Covid-19). Some of these new methods are they can record videos, create podcasts, use online apps, make study scripts, select videos on the web, promote intercommunication among students on chat apps as a way to support accessing classes, and so on... In short, these new obstacles cannot mean inequality of accessing the studies. They are considering it all!

All the professors at FEUSP are meeting to discuss new guidelines of planning, teaching, researching, evaluation and learning. For us students it is being really impressive and important results originated from discussions. The current administration of our School is really open and democratic to listen to us. Personally, I'm proud of studying at FEUSP. They consider our differences and try to attend to us as best as possible.

I'm usually maintaining contact with some classmates and we try to help each other to access the classes properly. I guess that the most important wisdom that we are learning in these times is about, the power of the union.

Brazil is living a complex political moment in our history and it's sad to see that we are losing a lot of rights, gradually and especially in the Education field. Furthermore, unfortunately we are the second country in the world with the greatest number of deaths in consequence of Covid-19. Beyond it there are a lot of vectors which I could spend too many pages to explain. The fact is all social inequalities since ever exists, now are more visible for all. We wonder when we are going to leave the pandemic and how. We believe that our daily lives are not going to be the same anymore...

I've been so worried about the complaints of many great opportunities, what worried me a lot was not just the complaints but the breakthroughs and transformations of many people's lives, I beheld in the hands of those opportunities, that is what made me to incline my ears more in the words from the mouths of those opportunities. The only thing I heard were the complaints about being too busy of this generation, the opportunities were grieving about not getting attention from the youth. I saw tears falling from the eyes of these opportunities as their hearts were overwhelmed by hatred. They then burst in one word cursing the social medias for stealing time and attention of this youth, which could be attentively paid to the opportunities that could have changed their lives.

Dreary
by

Nahabwe Keneth
(Uganda Christian University; Bishop Barham Campus)

8

It commenced mythical,
Not like a bed time story but rather Ragnarok.
Asphyxiation claiming innocents,
As if they were given lift to heaven.

So Dreary in a way that,
The Departed are inhumed by paramedics,
So, we didn't adjoin and victimized;
Consternation finding it's shine and sheen.

9

Very Dreary that,
With no passport and Visa, you in came the borders,
Devoiding kindreds,
Terminating our own Felicity,
Like an angel of Lucifer, decapitating the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

Really Dreary that,
Involuntary vacations initiated and work shifted to homes;
Google meet and zoom as means to communicate to one another,
Since we've been repressed from association.

Perfectly Dreary that,
The only way to live is to depart from human,
Masking our faces in contact to associates,
Gripping spanned to salutes
And extroverts bid from peer.

But one thing remains;
Whatever promised, must come to pass.
The son of man who takes away the sins of the world,
Never sleeps nor slumbers,
He comes by, you go down.

Covid-19 Poem Analysis

by

Luyanda “Dee Poet” Khumalo
 (University of KwaZulu-Natal; Edgewood Campus)

9

The writer used more abstract language through pictures, art. Particularly by graphically Designing/ combining a Series of pictures, paintings and writing to form one vision picture or an Idealistic image.

Title / Name of the poem: Covid-19 –in this case if read backwards it would make more sense. (right to left)

Theme name: The title was written to be read backwards –which signifies the ‘secrecy’, which the writer believes that there’s a lot hidden from the citizens or the world at large by the government in this current situation, both locally and internationally. Henceforth, the writer feels like the Government is not fully honest to its citizenship – due to psychological division caused by misguided information or propaganda that was spread about the arrival of this so ‘called virus’.

General Analysis: Life After this challenging situation won’t be the same again, citizens all over the globe especially the affected are still in shock, and most are ironically ‘living vivid dreams’—thus this implies that citizens suffer from Phobia of new adaptation and survival because this has never happened before to the many. Hence, citizens fear to change their lifestyles and their Surroundings.

Political analysis: Which is intrigued by the writings that quotes “The pandemic so strategic. Introduction of new World Order laws”. this further insinuates that the Writer believes that the so called “Pandemic” was used as a strategy to introduce New laws both locally and Globally.

'Perhaps with the enhancement of civilization, industrialisation transport and communication and network services,' --the world needs new laws'-
-thinks the writer—

Main Theme: The writer is concerned about Africa particularly South Africa in terms of better adaptation and survival. --the underprivileged especially the Blacks always suffer the most. The writer is raising concerns with regards to the African being victims of hunger, poverty, Violence and that most or some regulations stipulated by the Government under Disaster Management Act or the Covid-19 Guidelines and Rules are not for/ doesn't suite Africans particularly south Africans. Indeed, taken into deep consideration the plans and implementations that the leadership introduced to help its nation, the main concern of the writer is that these laws might not change and remain law forceful or active. -The question is raised, how long will Africans Survive?

The crying red Eye: Signifies the cries of the nation and its people.

The china Man: Represents the origin of the virus.

The Informal Settlements: Represents poverty, situations and underprivileged Africans having to deal with this virus. (poverty is a virus on its own)-Food insecurity.

The Woman at The Top Right corner: Represents laws introduced (Covid-19 guidelines and Rules) or any rules /laws introduced during this pandemic period.

Mariana - Student at FEUSP
(Faculty of Education, University of São Paulo, Brazil)

The COVID-19 pandemic has brought worldwide impact on health, economic and social levels. This context has made people in poverty, older persons and refugees even more vulnerable, and people all over the world have faced unemployment and lack of hospital beds, as the inequalities increase. The travel restrictions and curfews have now proved more vital than ever as a safety measure to contain outbreaks, but even considering the particular approaches of each nation in response to the pandemic, it can be said that no life has run its course normally.

While industries operate with reduced production capacity and some sectors of the economy have completely suspended their activities by recommendation of international health organizations, it's safe to say that Education is one of the sectors that has developed recommendation of international health organizations, it's safe to say that Education is one of the sectors that has developed the most changes to continue operating at distance.

Students and teachers have faced countless changes and their subsequent challenges regarding delivery methods, as the massive school closure and corresponding distance learning was adopted as a state policy in most states of Brazil, by current Ministry of Education's (MEC) data*. However, in what terms have these activities been maintained? The third category shown above is data collected by UNESCO regarding basic education students' access to school meals, and it's shown that 12 of the 27 states in Brazil have maintained the supply of school lunches only for most economically vulnerable students, while 13 are not providing any food at all, as of the time of publication, which can give a hint as to one of the essential assistance characteristics needed.

Due to the lack of state and domestic structures that should guarantee the enjoyment of children's basic needs, or the almost always accompanied families' lack of surplus resources to have Internet at home, this also touches on the issue of access to these remote classes in large-scale implementation, as a survey on student attendance data provided voluntarily by teachers from state schools in a city in the metropolitan region of São Paulo show that the rate of adherence to classes online in May was very low, which shouldn't come as a surprise since 66% of Brazilians between 9 and 17 years old don't access internet at home. In the capital, the biggest city in the country, teachers report the stress of the period and denounce the lack of structure for planning and producing these classes, and less than half of the students of state schools managed to connect in the first week of distance classes.

In a manner, the challenges imposed on basic and higher education are similar in the sense that public policies are not aligned with the real experience of the majority of students and teachers, since numerous difficulties in keeping up with the distance graduation courses have been presented. One of the oldest higher education institutions in the country, University of São Paulo (USP), has failed for decades to provide Wi-fi coverage for the students who live at USP's apartment complex, CRUSP. The accommodations were built to host the athletes in 1963's Pan American Games, and renovations have been scarce since then. After occupations of the buildings by students at the time, strongly claiming that this space should be served exclusively as student housing, the rectory demolished entire blocks of apartments and to this day occupies two of those as administrative buildings.

Furthermore, attacks on the student community are a constant, and as the COVID-19 crisis presents itself, it's interesting to point out that the resident students have been in isolation since the beginning of 2019, when not only the free pass for buses and subway was withdrawn, but also the half pass that should be guaranteed to every student in the state of São Paulo was cut, as well.

on student permanence since the vast majority of residents are in low-income, in contrast with the possibly upper-class students who live near the University and don't use the passes but still have the right to them, nonetheless.

With this measure, the resident students have been denied one of the three pillars of the University that is extension, unable to leave campus without paying high bus fares, not to mention the specific case of teaching degree courses' students who are directly influenced since the inside the campus' schools wouldn't be able to carry out all the internships from these courses, and to these students it was also denied the possibility to do them in another public institution that demanded public transportation to access.

At the student's accommodations, the daily struggles consist of not only infrastructure problems inside the apartments such as mould and electrical wire deterioration, but also the public spaces are compromised with the lack of maintenance, seeing that it's been two years since there aren't any collective laundries working anymore, and by a gas leaking last year, most of the collective kitchens were deactivated, as well. As of social matters, the current and neglected cases on mental health and domestic abuse continued and worsened during the quarantine periods. The reality of many students isn't far from the residents', especially those who come from other states and/or are also economically vulnerable. and by a not so clear criteria didn't have the right of permanence guaranteed.

By the pressure of some headlines that came out in big vehicles as The Intercept - that showed the neglect regarding the students who are also mothers and residents at CRUSP - and a TV health bulletin in Gazeta about the situation of the apartments and collective kitchens, the biggest organ of representation of economically vulnerable students, SAS (Social Assistance Service) finally decided to take some measures on some issues past known. Their response came late, when distributed cleaning kits for each apartment divided in two parts, and installed alcohol gel displays near the lifts with insufficient refill supply.

On an institutional level, USP's current posture on workers has also proven to be idle, since there's lack of adequate personal protective equipment (PPE) for all of those who kept on duty, and the rectory refused to guarantee isolation of workers who belong in the higher risk from COVID-19 group. This stance resulted in the deaths of two third-party companies' workers, who were security guards at MAC-USP (Museum of Contemporary Arts). As the pandemic progresses, the context leaves everything more uncertain for these people, workers and students, since there was no consensus among the faculties regarding the continuation or suspension of the class schedule.

A palliative measure to endorse the adherence of all institutes to distance learning consisted of the distribution of some individual Internet modems but with insufficient capacity of bytes for regularly watching all the classes in courses that remained active since the beginning of the quarantine, such as Polytechnic, for example. The initial criteria for these modems distribution was those kits would begin to be given for those residents who were also taking food at the restaurant on campus daily, in a coup attempt to reduce the demand of more than 1300 students to a little more than 200 who regularly take the meals.

The distribution was extended to non-resident students for a short period of time, and a common agreement made in both online assemblies from students at USP's Faculty of Education (FEUSP), in the afternoon and in the evening, was that this measure didn't contemplate all the students, and therefore, it's insufficient.

The same institute, which had initially opposed distance learning, recently gave in to pressure from the Rector at a recent meeting of the Advisory Council (Conselho Consultivo), and it was decided that the school semester would continue with remote activities, even though it's still a strong reivindicação by the students that the semester must be cancelled, or that it should be guaranteed that there are no penalties, as the majority of students who are also Education workers wouldn't be able to keep up with all the online platform resources and activities required.

Given these points, the criticism lies on what's coming out of remodelling the already ongoing school semester, and not on distance education as a well-structured modality itself. There's lack of wide accessible internet network in Brazil, and some measures taken worldwide not always apply, taking into consideration this reality. The many forms of education and the changes in the ways of teaching accompany the changes in the world and influence it, too, but to persevere through this crisis, efforts must be focused on contextualized and significant measures for those who are living it, taking in consideration the particularities of their demands, and not possibly increasing inequalities.

Mariana R., Pedagogy student in 8th semester at FEUSP.

Wole Soyinka Essay Topic: "I AM BECAUSE YOU ARE"

Submissions for The Wole Soyinka Essay competition of the annual Wole Soyinka International Cultural Exchange, WSICE, is NOW OPEN.

It opens June 5 and closes on the 26th.

The 2020 edition of the WSICE runs July 12-14 with programmes slated to hold in Nigeria and other parts of the world.

The theme for the competition is: I AM because YOU ARE, inspired by UBUNTU, the Southern Africa philosophy on the principle of interdependence of the Human Family, especially auspicious now in the era of covid-19, which has ruptured the fabric of our collective and common humanity.

This competition is open to young people between the ages of 12 and 22 and entries are accepted in English, French, Chinese, Portuguese, and Spanish.

It is divided into two age categories:

Age 12 - 16 -- (350-400words)

Age 17 - 22 -- (800-1000words)

PRIZES

SENIOR CATEGORY

Zonal winners - $300

Zonal runner ups - $200

THE PROJECT

During its inception, the internet was seen as a vital instrument for democracy and equality. In 2020, amidst a global pandemic and racial inequalities that are very much still alive, it is time to ask: Whose stories are told and who is telling these stories on the internet? And how do Artificial Intelligence, Algorithms and Bots shape our view of the world and perpetuate racisms? This is where the new Goethe-Institute project “Decolonise The Internet” sees its core.

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS: EDIT-A-THON FOR WOMXN!

As a kick-off, we are organizing an Edit-A-Thon to open up the world of Wikipedia to Womxn from Africa! Studies have shown that most of the articles on the Wikipedia are written from Europe and the US – and articles written from Africa are mainly written by men.

Therefore, the aim is to encourage African Womxn to learn about Wikipedia and to take up the important task of adding knowledge to the world's largest online reference that are relevant to them. This will increase visibility and representation of topics and languages which are important to both Womxn and Africans. We particularly encourage you to write in local languages apart from English to increase the amount of articles found in these languages!

So, if you want to learn how to write, edit and publish articles on the Wikipedia, then this is for you. All you need is access to a computer and a stable internet connection, and you are ready to go!

The Edit-A-Thon will take place on 20 June, 27 June and 4 July. To register, please send an email to Stefanie.Kastner@goethe.de and we will supply you with more information.

We plan to host an editing and translation competition with great prizes after this Edit-A-Thon, so you don't want to miss out on learning the first steps.

Let's work together on making the internet a more equal place!

The Goethe-Institute's new programme “Decolonise the Internet” focuses on bridging the unequal representation of voices from the Global South on the internet and aims to increase awareness on how AI and algo rhythms might perpetuate racisms. The projects take place in ten different countries in sub-Saharan Africa and has different formats, such as edit-a-thons, podcasts and texts. In South Africa, the Goethe-Institute has partnered with the WikimediaZA Foundation and Whose Knowledge.
